Anthropology in Action

Whatever their field of choice, anthropologists can change the way we view and interact with our world. There are many areas of anthropological study...

- Cultural Anthropology
Examines social patterns and processes within and across cultures
- Archaeology
Understanding the past through historical and pre-historic materials, architectural features, landscapes and remains
- Biological/Physical Anthropology
The study of human and non-human primate evolution, ecology, behavior, and bio-cultural variation
- Linguistic Anthropology
Studies how language reflects and influences social life
- Medical Anthropology
Observing and explaining what factors influence people's health and well-being
- Forensic Anthropology
Confirming cause of death through skeletal, decomposed or unidentified human remains
- Business Anthropology
Helping solve business problems through research on consumers, organizational change, and innovation
- Visual Anthropology
Using photos, film, and video to describe, analyze and interpret behavior
- Environmental Anthropology
Examines how people interact with, respond to and alter the environment
- Museum Anthropology
Sharing lived experiences and scientific discoveries through exhibitions, educational programs, and material collections
