Building on a distinguished history dating back to 1908, Montclair State University is a leading institution of higher education in New Jersey. Designated a Research Doctoral University by the Carnegie Classification of Institutions of Higher Education, the University’s nine colleges and schools serve more than 20,000 undergraduate and graduate students with more than 300 doctoral, master’s and baccalaureate level programs. Situated on a beautiful, 252-acre suburban campus just 12 miles from New York City, Montclair State delivers the instructional and research resources of a large public university in a supportive, sophisticated and diverse academic environment.

Until recently, MSU was primarily an undergraduate-serving institution, but it is now experiencing considerable growth with a marked increase in research programs and initiatives. In addition to the Research Doctoral University designation—making MSU one of four such public institutions in New Jersey—the University has also been recognized by the New Jersey Office of Higher Education as one of eight doctoral degree-granting institutions in the state. In addition, MSU was designated a public research university in July 2017.

In the fall of 2015, MSU surpassed the 25% Hispanic enrollment threshold required by the U.S. Department of Education to be eligible for funding as a “Hispanic Serving Institution.” This will open up future avenues for research and program funding to support many areas to include (but not limited to) the purchase of laboratory equipment and educational materials for teaching, faculty development and student support services.

According to the 2013 CIRP Freshman Survey, 30% of first-time, full-time freshman report they are the first generation to attend college.

Because of its location in Northern New Jersey, MSU serves a highly diverse student body. In 2016, university-wide, 32% of the students graduating with a bachelor’s degree or certificate in the undergraduate level are underrepresented minority (URM) students. The College of Humanities and Social Sciences (CHSS) undergraduate student body consists of 42% URM and 67% female students.

CHSS combines a traditional liberal arts education with focused preparation in a wide range of disciplines and professional areas, offering 20 majors, more than 40 minors, and numerous areas of graduate study and professional certificate programs. CHSS majors and minors can reach across disciplines, exploring areas of interest from multiple perspectives, which allow students to draw from a range of disciplinary areas to better understand topics such as gender, religion and international studies. The CHSS curriculum offers students professional certification as child advocates, speech and language therapists, paralegals and teachers of psychology, social studies, foreign languages, literature and linguistics. In Spring 2017, 4,185 undergraduate and 708 graduate students are enrolled in CHSS.

The Department of Communication Sciences and Disorders programs are designed to provide basic and advanced professional preparation, with a strong commitment to theoretical and research foundations of clinical intervention. The Department offers a master's degree in Speech-Language Pathology and doctoral degrees in Audiology, which are accredited by the Council on Academic Accreditation in Audiology and Speech-Language Pathology of the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association. In addition, there is the state-of-the-art Montclair State University Center for Audiology & Speech-Language Pathology. The center includes two sound suites for diagnostic audiology testing as well as rooms dedicated to evoked potentials testing, vestibular testing and fitting of hearing aids and other assistive devices. There are also ten individual rooms for speech and language therapy and four group therapy rooms equipped with streaming digital video to capture each session and enable clinical staff to observe therapy remotely. As of Spring 2017, there are 148 graduate students, 93% of which are female.
