Leadership doesn't stop in the classroom; it follows you everywhere you go. It's about building and challenging yourself, and in turn, improving the world around you."

EMERGING LEADERS LEARNING COMMUNITY

SELECTION SERVICE SUCCESS

A program tailored for the development of leaders...

An acknowledgement of incoming students with outstanding contributions...

A reward to those who give unconditionally to the community...

An emerging group of leaders committed to success

ABOUT THE PROGRAM

The Emerging Leaders Learning Community program began in the fall of 2001. Since then, the program has continued to develop and expand its commitment to the development of student leaders at MSU.

The ELLC has produced numerous successful student leaders who lead clubs, organizations, fraternities, and sororities; are involved in community service; excel in athletics, and excel academically.

Students who are significantly involved in co-curricular activities, community service, clubs & organizations, and have demonstrated leadership qualities are considered for the program. The program begins during the first semester of the freshman year, so students must indicate interest during Pre-Orientation.

ELLC students experience a team environment, collaborating with peers in utilizing acquired leadership traits and skills to prepare for a full college experience through classes, seminars and retreats.

FIRST SEMESTER ELLC STUDENTS WILL BE REQUIRED TO REGISTER FOR:

ENWR-105

College Writing I:

A workshop course to develop thinking and writing abilities through frequent writing assignments based on critical response to intellectually challenging questions. Emphasis is on the writing process--prewriting, drafting, revising, using peer and teacher critique, editing, and proofreading. A minimum of five essays is required, including an extensive documented essay that requires research. Evaluation is partly based on a portfolio of revised writing. With ENWR 106, meets Gen Ed 2002 Communication, Writing/Literature. Meets the 1983 General Education Requirement (GER) - Communication, Writing. 3 credits.

Intellectual Prose. Prerequisites: Passing score on the MSU Basic Skills Test or successful completion of ENWR 100.

SPCM-101

Fundamentals of Speech:

Introduces students to the theoretical and practical requirements of different types of public presentations, and helps students develop an understanding and appreciation of the dynamic nature of the communication process. The course focuses on the basic elements of the communication process, listening, communicator and audience characteristics, basic research skills, and message composition and delivery. Students learn about the demands of public presentations in culturally and professionally diverse environments and develop presentation competence and flexibility. Meets Gen Ed 2002 - Communication, Communication. Meets the 1983 General Education Requirement (GER) - Communication, Speaking/Listening. 3 credits.

GNE-199

New Student Seminar:

Prepares first-year students for college-level work and campus life. It acquaints students with university expectations and resources and provides them with the academic skills and strategies to allow them to succeed as college students. It addresses the social and personal issues that students face as well as helping them to appreciate and grow from campus diversity. Meets Gen Ed 2002 - New Student Seminar. 1 credit.

PSYC-294

Psychology of Leadership:

Students begin to understand and articulate their own implicit theories of leadership and develop their own leadership styles. While receiving a grounding in historical and contemporary psychological theories on leadership, they will practice leadership through community service and assess themselves based on theories, assessment instruments, and behaviors. This is a service-learning course. Meets Gen Ed 2002 - Social Science for non-psychology majors only. 3 credits.
