Adam Mayer, Director of Career Development

Reportedly, the first ever email was sent in 1971, so you'd think we would have this down by now, but we don't. There are still some really egregious email practices out there. For starters, use an email that includes your name, not fuzzybunnyslippers@aol.com. Use a compelling subject in the subject line, read your email out loud before you send it and be sure to use spellcheck. Business Insider offers up a tidy list of do's and don'ts in this article. Write on.
