Answering the Call
Barry A. Bachenheimer ’01 MA has experienced the coronavirus crisis on two fronts: As a first responder saving lives, and, when the pandemic closed schools, in educational triage helping teachers move instruction online. Now he’s working on a third front – making sure both teachers and students are ready for an uncertain fall and can adjust to changes. [View full story]

The Red Carpet Online
Since 2009, Montclair State’s Department of Theatre and Dance has hosted the Annual Theatre Night Awards – also known as the Foxys – bringing together University alumni and high school theater students and teachers from across New Jersey. The awards program, which was started by a University professor and her students, has had an impact on theater programs statewide by giving drama students and teachers a chance to learn from each other’s best work, as well as a competition that inspires them to raise their game. A Laboratory for What the World Could Be

As the country grapples with its long history of systemic racism and marchers take to the streets night after night to demand change, the Montclair State University community is coming together in support of each other and its commitment to social justice and equality. A home to first-generation students, students of color, students hard hit by the public health and economic toll of the coronavirus, as well as to scholarly experts in race, social justice, education and history, the University is positioned to lead the critical conversations of transformational change. Crunching the Numbers on Disease

With New Jersey reopening in phases, a mathematical model built by a Montclair State University professor forecasts how social distancing, testing and tracing can help policymakers understand how various approaches may work to curb the coronavirus. “The pandemic is certainly not over,” says Professor Eric Forgoston, chairperson of Applied Mathematics and Statistics, echoing public health officials and the World Health Organization, which recently warned “the worst is yet to come.” [View full story]

Giving News

A Life Behind the Mask, a compelling biography about the baseball legend and former Montclair resident, was recently released. Of course, Yogi’s name is quite familiar on the Montclair State Campus, home to the Yogi Berra Museum and Yogi Berra Stadium – all found along Yogi Berra Drive. The University is also home to its nationally regarded School of Communication and Media and its rapidly growing program in sports communication. [View full story]

Fostering Success

It’s not always easy to know what students have been going through when they enter the classroom. For many, the struggle is real, whether it’s having enough to eat or having a place to live. For students who have grown up in foster care, the obstacles are especially challenging. “When in foster care, there’s no primer on what to do,” says Psychology Professor Deborah Fish Ragin.
