Teaching and Learning

Already serving over 7,000 majors, minors and students in graduate programs, AY17 saw the launch of several new programs. CHSS now offers a MA in Clinical Psychology with a concentration in Forensic Psychology, a minor in Social Work, and a graduate certificate in Homeland Security. New programs that are accepting students this coming year include a major in Arabic Studies (Modern Languages and Literatures), and joint BA/MA programs in several subjects.

Research

The College of Humanities and Social Science is home to active researchers and regularly published writers. Faculty and staff are involved with over 20 active external grants. The College faculty serve in a variety of editorial roles, with over a dozen faculty members in leading roles as editors, associate editors, or book review editors. AY16 has seen publication of 25 books, 171 journal articles, essays, and reviews, 38 book chapters, and over 250 presentations at international, national and regional conferences. Faculty research from the College is promulgated throughout peer-reviewed venues primarily, but research findings and reputations have generated significant media attention as well. For example, this year saw media coverage of English professor Jeff Miller’s discovery of the earliest known portion of the King James Bible, Psychology’s Debra Zellner’s advances in the psychology of food; Sarah Lowe’s insights on the psychological effects of natural disasters, and Modern Languages and Literature’s Elizabeth Emery’s award of a prestigious NEH Humanities grant to fund archival research in France.

Service

Faculty and staff across the College have provided service to students, their professions, and the local community in a myriad of ways. On-campus highlights of initiatives that faculty advanced include hosting writer Jumphi Lahari, sponsoring “Beyond Ferguson: Poetry, Prose, & Student Activism after Michael Brown and the offering the lecture series, “Queering the Sciences.” Off campus, faculty are extremely active, often bringing students with them. For example, faculty in the Justice Studies program organized the Petey Greene Program which provides college volunteer tutors for incarcerated students. As another example, Fran Prezant’s work winning a grant from the Kessler Foundation has enabled the University to support the ReelAbilities film festival of Montclair. Finally, clinicians from the Psychology Department provided services for more than 50 external clients this year. CHSS faculty and staff serve on local, regional, national and international boards and advisory committees, lending their expertise and willingness to serve to hundreds of organizations.
